

emsi Data

Current and complete labor market information.

If you've ever worked with labor market data, you know it can be hard to collect and present. It's also often incomplete and outdated. So we collect the data, bring it up to date, and serve it up so you can use it effectively.

- Detailed: info on industries, occupations, demographics, wages, skills, education, training, companies, and more
- Comprehensive: nearly 90 federal, state, and private data sources brought together for quick analysis.
- Current: updated four times per year by our team of full-time data analysts.
- Regional: available for any county or individual ZIP code in the U.S.
- Easy Access: built into easy-to-access web-based tools so the data can be used quickly and effectively.

We take the hassle out of data research

- Analyst, a powerful tool for exploring employment data
- Career Coach, a tool that helps jobseekers understand local employment opportunities
- Our Consulting Department, which delivers reports that help regional planners and decision-makers understand and analyze a range of workforce, education, and economic development issues.

Why EMSI Data?

Typical labor market data ignores much of the economy. On average, about 35% of all county-level data is suppressed to hide firm-specific numbers. These datasets also generally exclude proprietors, understating the total number of workers by an average of 17%. In contrast, EMSI data removes suppressions and includes proprietors, creating a more complete picture of the regional workforce.
